TIM HORTON'S: MY NEWLY-FOUND CANADIAN SOULMATE

Central Ohio: the home of black-tar heroin, human-trafficking, and ... Tim Horton's? On my way to Kroger to buy "groceries," and definitely not alcohol, I saw a red and white sign with familiar words that I wanted to further familiarize myself with: Tim Horton's (Drive Thru). I did not know much about the franchise, other than the fact that they sold donuts and coffee, and they were Canadian. I went through the drive-thru and ordered the iconic chocolate dip donut and an XL original blend, and the cashier told me to "have a blessed day." I drove to the nearest parking spot because seasonal depression was hitting and it was hitting hard. I needed something good. I took one bite into the donut, and I knew. This was all I needed. Tim Horton's donuts are delightful in every possible way- their donuts are sweet, but not overwhelmingly so, light but filling, and all-around delicious. I moved on to the coffee and took a sip. The original blend is delicious and warming. I would describe it as the warm fireplace I want to retreat to at the end of a cold winter's day. This coffee gave me hope for a second. Something about that red cup, brown lid and the Canadian maple leaf make me feel like I'm not in Ohio.

The coffee is strong, tasty, and it really gets the engine running; the engine that is my problem-ridden digestive system. The coffee went right through me in the best way possible (sorry, this was TMI, but everyone poops. Get over it). On top of the delightful taste experience I had undergone, it only costs $3.24 (with tax)! A relatively low price to pay for finding a sliver of happiness within the capitalist society in which we dwell. I am not writing this to advertise for them; I am surprisingly not getting paid for this. I am writing this to enlighten my fellow Denisonians, as Seasonal Affective Disorder is starting to hit me like a damn truck. So, to the angel of a cashier that told me to "have a blessed day," I want you to know that that day was the most blessed I have had in a long while. Thank you.

JAX AND CHARLIE FIX YOUR SEX LIFE

Hi everyone. Because we have been having sex with one another for years now (that being Charlie Schweiger and Jax Preyer) and it is has been just thrilling from day one, we thought we would share the wealth with the less fortunate. We are here to answer your burning questions about sex that have been submitted to us and definitely not just shit we made up!)

Question: My sex life with my boyfriend has gotten pretty dull. Any tips to spice things up?

Answer:

This is a common problem, don't feel ashamed. Luckily, we've got some killer suggestions:

- 1) Purchase an acrylic portrait of Thomas Jefferson and hang it on your ceiling so you can make eye contact with a founding father whilst climaxing. If the hope of a New America doesn't motivate you to procreate, what will???
- 2) Bring some toys into the mix! We personally love legos. So intellectually stimulating! Have you checked out the architecture collection? We've been working on it for weeks! If you know what we mean...
- 3) Sexual connection relies heavily on emotional connection. So, spend more time together! Fun idea: perform a seance together to summon a recently deceased relative! The bond you share will be greatly strengthened by conversations with your late aunt who might also have some advice, herself!
- 4) Finally, address your boyfriend's long-existing drinking problem. Tell him to put down the bottle! First comes love, then comes marriage, then comes confronting your partner about their need to get incapacitated in order feel whole. You two will be back to feelin' frisky in no time!

Join us next week for more steamy and definitely helpful advice!

xoxo, Jax and Charlie
