SOPHIA'S BEST COZY MYSTERIES OF THE DECADE

This is truly just going to be a lot of my opinion.... But, as we approach the end of the 2010s, I would like to take a moment to share my guilty pleasure with you all. I love to read Cozy Mysteries. I love Cozies because they always surprise me, even if I can solve the murder before the end of the book, I am always surprised by how wild the [insert idyllic town/village/hotel] can be and how crazy the people living there can be too. I read a lot of these mysteries, and I think I know a thing or two about a good mystery. So without further ado, I present to you my dear Bullsheet friends, my list of the top 5 Cozies of the decade.

1. Full Bodied Murder by Christine E. Blum (December 2017)

The first book in my all time favorite cozy series! The Rose Avenue Wine Club Mysteries series follows the hijinks of one group of middle-aged women living in a beautiful suburb near San Diego, California, whose main passions are drinking wine. While this book is by no means the strongest in the series, this book does lay the foundation which creates such compelling and strong characters as the series goes on. I would recommend The Rose Avenue Wine Club to anyone, and Full Bodied Murder is truly the only place to start.

2. Fillet of Murder by Linda Reilly (May 2015)

This one is actually truly a literary masterpiece. It is not higher up on my list only because fried food freaks me out. But, this book is so well written and structured. The voice of the protagonist is engaging and authentic and the hits just keep coming with this one. Even though the ending feels a bit obvious, this story about redemption, revenge, and moving on is one for the ages. If you take nothing else away from this list, know that I highly recommend this one.

3. Dying for Strawberries by Sharon Farrow (September 2016)

I was hesitant about Dying For Strawberries in the first few chapters, but after the main suspect in the initial murder is also murdered, I was hooked. I read this book quickly and upon finishing it, immediately bought the sequel. Its protagonist is compelling and charming (even if she has an unbelievable business), and the town of Oriole Point is so believable and engaging, that I was able to forgive the book its trespassings. And halfway through the book, the protagonist adopts a sassy, elderly parrot, so that is iconic.

4. Left Fur Dead by J.M. Griffin (July 2019)

This book is a real slow climb, it feels like there is very little happening for a very long portion of the book and then suddenly a lot happens all at once. There are a lot of possible suspects throughout the course of this story, but none of them appear to be the murderer / rabbit farm vandal. The most insane part of this book though, beyond the protagonist's job being Rabbit Rescue Farm Owner and Operator, is that her companion and sidekick throughout the book is a telepathic rabbit who speaks to her and only her. You've got to give them points for that.

5. Death By Dumpling by Vivien Chien (March 2018)

This book is a departure from a lot of Cozy tropes in many ways, but it remains interesting, convincing, and exciting. This one is definitely a gem, and sets up the foundation for a wonderful series.

Honorable Mention: Chocolate Chip Cookie Murder by Joanne Fluke (May 2011)

This book is utterly iconic. The first book in arguably the most successful Cozy Mystery series of all time, Hannah Swensen is a baker and these books feature a fun treat, most chapters offer a recipe for the titular baked goods or some derivative. Fun, mysterious, and delicious.

JUST SOME WHOLESOME DENISON CONTENT

I heard something kind of wholesome and I wanted to share. This was overheard on the third floor of the library when I was studying a few weeks ago. Just two bros talking it out in the library:

Bro 1: Dude, I am gonna do Big Brothers Big Sisters.

Bro 2: What's that?

Bro 1: It's like that mentorship program? [refers to some other bro they both know] does it and it's like good shit. And it's a resume booster and like I love working with kids.

Bro 2: Oh good for you, bro.

I just appreciated these bros showing one another compassion.
