2019 FALL PLEDGE CLASS

Betsy Wagner already knows the ‘Sheet’s love of trail mix and using pictures to take up space. Among the Administration she is already known after her risqué “Smash-or-Pass” article due to her controversial choices in the rankings. In crafting her application, Betsy employed the curial journalistic tactic of ranking her interviewers by apple eating skill for... um... something.... Anyways, Jax’s (not a man) received the highest ranking of a 36(!) out of a possible 40. Lots of rankings here. 1/8 of New ‘Sheeters.

Blyth Dahlem is a big stan of President Ronald Regan. Among other political things he already knows of Zach’s sexy Mitch McConnell Halloween costume. So he basically understands what he’s getting himself into by joining the Bullsheet. He believes he is the best choice for the Bullsheet because he is “definitely not the best choice”. Bold answer. He also has the idea for having Wheel of Fortune but all the contestants are dyslexic. He is allergic to eggs so don’t go taking him by any chicken coop to celebrate!

Ellie Schrader was totally not forgotten about when we sent out interview times. Nope, totally not at all. She wants to know where to access the campus crime report. Like really wants to know. Like OMG her life depends on it level of wants to know. She also met her current boyfriend at the Moonies, which, hey, something finally good has come out of them! She can also serve as a human armrest and can write lots and lots of sentences is the need arises. So she’s got that going for her.

Emma Rutherford B. Woody Hayes has some pretty nifty shoes. You should really check them out. She is a big fan of Tame Impala and can recite all of their lyrics if you ask nicely or just start singing them. Either way is fine in the end. She is a theater person (that should tell you about all you need to know) and her favorite activity is loitering with food in Slayter until the blackout hours are over.

Continues on back....

FROM FRONT

Josh Poe is a competitive Mario Kart driver and is willing to play anyone to prove it. Beyond his future career goals, John is a disk jockey with WDUB so listen to him on the radio whenever the Doobie gets their broadcast license back. He is an expert in cleaning up vomit (“mostly not mine”) and how to poorly play the drums. In his preferences on staff he believes that James is the best with his beard that feels like a “nice cheese grater”

Maggie Bell once watched the movie Argo in not a good state of mind. James is her top choice of those on staff mostly due to his “superfluously knotted blonde hair” and probably his beard too. Maggie runs a meth lab out of an old tool shed which will be super helpful whenever DCGA fails to pass a budget again. She really wants the ‘Sheet to get political which means she hasn’t read any of the fucking fall 2016 ‘sheets.

William (x1) Bugg would give sex between Jack and him a 7 out of 10 but that’s just an average of both experience. He goes by the name of Bugg since his pre-college days to distinguish himself from other Williams, as well as his current roommate, William, and his fellow newbie, William. Bugg only reads the buggiest of books but not in the state of Maine and not while drinking coffee. If you see him around campus make sure to bug him!

William (x2) Kelsey is a believer in our Lord and Savior, Adam Weindeer, and that we must “offer daily sacrifices of satire and comedy” to “THE THING THAT FUNDS” aka Michael Eniser. He doesn’t have any pictures online so enjoy this one (->) of William H. Kelsey who was a US Rep. from New York in the lead up to the Civil War. Seriously, underclassmen, get a facebook and make the mistake us older folks made by posting everything online. It makes our job easier.

Editors Note (pls read)
 Hey All.
 The Bullsheet had a record number of applicants (~18) making choices were tough this year. Due to five seniors leaving and a want for a larger writing pool, we, as staff, decided to bring on 8 newbies this year to maintain and expand the high quality publication that we are.
