ANOTHER BREAKFAST REVIEW BY CHARLIE

Welcome back, fellow Denisonians. I think we can all agree that spring semester involves a more difficult adjustment than fall semester, and instead of seasonal depression hitting in the middle of the semester, you start the semester with it. Whew. Remember my Tim Horton's review? This is going to be similar, but about a different fast food item: McDonald's Egg McMuffins. Let me tell y'all- these hit different when you're losing hope. The artificial American cheese- the taste of something that is one molecule away from being plastic, the perfect, crispy texture of the muffin, and the egg which is advertised as freshly cracked. It tastes good, but I am not sure how fresh it truly is. Anyway, the point is that this sandwich is delicious. Sometimes you just have to succumb to the horribly toxic American food system. All three of these components create the perfect breakfast sandwich. I prefer mine without Canadian bacon, because it *slightly* lowers my carbon footprint. This sandwich is perfect, but you have to make sure that you eat it while it's hot. I went to the McDonald's in Heath near the Indian Mound Mall (yes, I also believe that the name is ethically deplorable), and it cost a hot $1.94. I went to a different McDonald's and it was $3.19, so I would recommend the McDonald's in Heath. Bring eight quarters, two dollar bills, a two-dollar bill, or two-hundred pennies- however you prefer. Believe me when I say that this... THIS is another example of a "little-thing" worth being compared to the warm fire you want to retreat to at the end of the day. This is not sponsored, but I will be a McDonald's stan until the day I die, and (some of) you KNOW how much I hate corporate America.

CHIPOTLE MAYO

Since we are on the topic of food there is one food that tops them all: Chipotle Mayo. Ok, so it's really a sauce (or a "condiment" if you're one of those people) but in a day-in-age where Whoppers are plants and alcohol is just spiked bubbly water anything is food. Anyways, there is just something about this food that makes it so perfect. Maybe it is because it is a walking contradiction of itself. It is mayo (white people's favorite) mixed with spice (toxic to white people). It is as if Pete Buttigieg had support not just among white people. The two shouldn't go together but in this case they do. Or maybe it is one of the few orange sauces out there and who doesn't like changing things up from time to time? It just tastes amazing and goes on anything that's not already covered by ranch (I'll never abandon you ranch though, you're still my main sauce). If you want to be adventuresome and experience the joy that has all the health hazards errr.... I mean benefits of mayo with the kick of a not really hot spice, you can get it on anything in Slayter and they sometimes have bowls of it in Huffman and Curtis.

HOW TO KEEP YOUR SELF ENTERTAINED DURING THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL

If you are like the millions of Americans that are watching the 12-hours-a-day Senate impeachment trial of President Trump you may be getting a little bit bored. That's ok, republican senators are too. Even with the trial being about the riveting allegations that the president obstructed the carrying out of justice in the U.S. House's investigation into the president's potentially illegal withholding of aid money to Ukraine for political reasons it can still be a little eye-glazing. So here are five ways to stay engaged:

Remember that you are watching the erosion and fall of a republic. That's doesn't happen every day you know!

Pry that American just has a better series finale than Game of Thrones.

Some of the House Managers and the president's defense team are real cuties. <3 Adam Schiff.

Drunk calling your senator's office is always a fun time.

Everyone no matter the eventual outcome (acquittal) is going to be pissed. So open up twitter, read the Facebook comments and ride the rage-train baby to election day!
