MORE ICELAND FACTS

Guess who's back, back again. . . That's right, it's William with more drivel about Iceland. Why Iceland you may ask? Well, you see, Iceland is hilarious.

Did you know that:

Iceland has no military except for a very small coast guard?

Only a monster would invade Iceland.

In May of 1940 the U.K invaded Iceland.

See above. What did they want, sheep?

Iceland has fought three wars against the U.K., all of which were about fish, and all of which Iceland won.

I'm sorry Britain, but how do you lose a war against a country with no military.

There was only one casualty during these wars, and that was an Icelandic engineer who got electrocuted.

Don't go into STEM, you can be electrocuted. Be a fisherman instead, much safer.

PSA: PLEASE BE SANITARY (CORONAVIRUS, ANYONE?)

So I live in Schaff House, which is a lovely place to live. The rooms are big, there's good heating/air conditioning (depending on the weather), and the lovely housekeeping staff works very hard to make sure the building stays clean for us. I could get into the frankly disrespectful mess that is left in the kitchen by residents at least once a week (clean up your messes, folks), or the fact that we only have one washer and dryer for the entire building, one of which has not worked for a month (get your shit together, Denison), but I'm actually here to complain about something that I never in my entire life imagined would be an issue plaguing me as AN ADULT at a PRESTIGIOUS LIBERAL ARTS COLLEGE.

There are people, on my floor, at least, who seem to lack the basic decency to wipe up their toothpaste spills, wash their hands, or to FLUSH A GODDAMN TOILET. I don't know about any of you, but I have always been taught to clean up after myself. Especially in a shared space, it is important to make sure things are clean and not gunky for the other people who have to use a space. And yet, day after day, there are paper towels on the floor because people don't push down the ones in trash to make more room, and day after day there are sinks that people don't rinse out after brushing their teeth. And there have been so many times where I have been in the bathroom and witnessed someone use the toilet, only to walk right past the sink. Or, almost more insultingly, they turn the water on for two seconds and just kinda wet their hands. I learned how to wash my hands in kindergarten, and make sure to do it whenever I use the bathroom. Personally, the thought of walking around with piss and shit on my hands all day is a bit unsavory. We're in the midst of a global epidemic, folks. The least you can do is make sure you're not carrying around excess germs.

But the thing that really gets my goat is that people don't even flush the toilets. It's gotten so bad that my CA had to print out signs reminding people to flush, and put them inside the stalls. Two for each stall—one above the toilet and one on the door that you see when you go to leave. There is no way that people are not seeing them. And yet, for some reason, I still witness people using the bathroom and leaving their expulsions to fester. We are all at least 18 in this building, there is absolutely no reason why the toilets are not being flushed, except for sheer laziness, apathy, or entitled-ness. It is not anyone else's job to wash your hands or to flush the toilet for you—it is yours.

It's just frankly mind-boggling that this is an issue. These are basic things we all learned as children. Let's be adults please, and flush the fucking toilet.
