SOME FACTS ABOUT ICELAND

You know how some kids go through weird phases where they are obsessed with Dinosaurs, or Egypt, or something? Well my weird obsession was Iceland. Every now and then, in order to dredge up old memories, I check in on the Icelandic national news site (The Iceland Monitor) in order to see what's popping in everybody's favorite geothermic hotspot.

Here are some of the greatest hits of the last couple of years:

Arsonists finally destroy Iceland's Christmas goat

Why finally? Does every Icelander on there way to the skyr factory or local sheep farm see the Christmas Goat and just hate it? Do they whisper under bated breath, "if only some brave soul would destroy that horrible Christmas Goat"? Were their prayers finally answered?

Day of Icelandic Horse Tomorrow

Other than the fact that I almost had an aneurism trying to figure out what this means, it's actually pretty cool. The Icelandic horse is a fluffy gem of a horse and deserves its own national holiday.

Reykjavik's most famous cat gets kidnapped

What kind of monster kidnaps the most famous cat in Iceland? Second most famous would be fine, but as soon as you go after the most famous cat you better believe that Reykjavik will send all two of its police detectives after you.

Grýla is alive and well in the mountains eating human sushi

What?

Horse puts new rules for buses to the test

So you know how Icelandic horses are great and deserve their own holiday? Well they also deserve to be allowed on buses. And now they are.

Icelander hangs out washing in shoulder-deep snow

Other than the fact that this is so stereotypically Icelandic, it raises some important questions. Why would you put your clothes out to dry in shoulder deep snow? They are just going to freeze, silly.

Roll in dew covered grass tonight according to Icelandic folklore

I'm not gonna argue with this headline.

The Icelandic horse is a big fluffy boy

Horses can have a little bus travel, as a treat.

Terminator marathon in Laugarneskirkja Church on Good Friday

Is Arnold Schwarzenegger a Christ figure? Was his famous quote "I'll be back" rife with spiritual implications? I may never know, because I didn't go to this Good Friday service.

Minister Writes Crime Novel

Please tell me this is the same Minister that held a Terminator marathon on Good Friday.
