“BRUHHH”

I saw your instagram story and really really like it.. there's something about the homemade imperfection of it that'll capture remembering this time well

Hello friends, I hope this issue of The Bullsheet finds you sane, satisfied, and most importantly, stimulated ;). Attached is a picture of the arm belonging to my dear friend Claire (who just happens to be all of those things, except for sane and satisfied). She attends UW-Madison, but our routine FaceTime calls make her feel like a real Denison student with remote learning and such. Out of boredom and a craving for a creative outlet (let's be real tho, attention was probably the driving force). Regardless of motive, sweet sweet Claire decided to give herself a tattoo during her time of social distancing and isolation (“bruhhh” is the caption from her instagram story; it is not the new tattoo she gave herself). The bottom, intact star is from 2018. Some may look at this creative decision as a bad thing, but she received the text attached (from a guy whom she does not love back) to the left shortly after posting the photo above. There you have it, folks. My advice to you during this time is to look at silver linings? Idk but also to not turn to the needle. At least you don't have a f*cked up star on your arm... forever... RIP.

I BOUGHT A MATCHING ~SWEATSUIT~ AND IT CHANGED MY LIFE I THINK

It's 2020, so maybe you've heard of the brand Outdoor Voices, or maybe you haven't. It's kind of like lululemon, but less problematic and less corporate America-esque (at least that's the vibe that I get, so I could be very wrong don't @ me). Since quarantine began and social distancing has been implemented by most, I have worked out maybe twice but honestly that's generous. However, I recently discovered a life hack: I like to trick myself into thinking that I have worked out by wearing workout sets as I do absolutely nothing around my house! My favorite set that I have worn to date is the Outdoor Voices Nimbus Cotton hoodie & shorts combo. This material is heavenly- thick but not to a point that could lead to instant overheating, soft but not the unnatural, brand new sweatshirt kind that'll lose its softness after one (1) cold wash cycle and a quarter of a trip through the dryer. It's the perfect material for a sweatsuit, though I am no expert (OV if u read this pls sponsor meeee). I chose the color "Scout," which is a bright, darker than sky blue (pictured below). This color is pleasant. It reminds me of the robin's eggs that I can't find because I am following the stay at home orders ;) or the color of the sky during a perfect spring day that I can't enjoy to the fullest because of the same reason. F*ck, man just let me out! Anyway, I have another set coming in the color "Apple," which is just a basic red. I feel protected and weirdly empowered when I wear these and its honestly evoked the closest thing to serotonin I have experienced since like December (I am aware quarantine started in March). Anyway, I would recommend if you're looking for a fun quarantine outfit or just want a new comfy pair of sweats that Karl Marx himself would maybe, possibly approve of. At least more than if you were to go back to L*I*lemon for some leggings that half the campus wore to class on a daily basis before remote learning. BUT I am solely here to tell you, the beloved reader, that I love the Nimbus Cotton set, and I hope you do too! :*

P.S. This stupid picture does not do the IRL color justice !!!
