ANNOUNCING MY CANDIDACY FOR MAYOR OF MY LIVING ROOM

In the uncertainty of the COVID-19 crisis, it has been a breath of fresh air to witness the great leadership of political pundits throughout the nation come together and work their hardest to bring this nightmare to an end by engaging in a desperate war between state and federal governments, or, in the case of Georgia Governor Brian Kemp, learning vital information about an extremely lethal virus which has already taken a stronghold in the state you represent WEEKS after that information become available to everyone and their Facebook Aunt. So inspired am I that I, too, will be trying my hand at politics.

I would like to formally announce that I will be running for Mayor of My Living Room to restore law and order and eventually become President of My Family. Rather than present my stance on the issues and policy (TV volume, crumbs, putting a coaster on surfaces before setting a glass down) I would like to instead present a full-blown takedown of my opposing candidates.

THE INCUMBENT: This weird papier mache bird I bought my mom like ten years ago.

He might look harmless, but if you were to look up “arrogance” in the dictionary, this motherfucker’s cold, soulless expression would be staring right back at you. He is a ruler and a despot. If you are able to notice the bottle in the background you’ll see his expansive collection of fine liquors- all purchased on the taxpayers’ dime, mind you! He is a drunkard with a fitful temper that renders his townsfolk (my family) too frightened to speak up or out against him. I hate to stir up any more gossip, but there’s a rumor he began an affair with a younger woman who later vanished under mysterious circumstances, leaving only a letter explaining she had fled to go on an Outward Bound exploration to “find herself”. Most of the letter was misspelled and grammatically incorrect, suggesting fowl play.

MY VERY REFLECTION:

Know thy self, know thy enemy. Due to lack of participation from other family members in the mayoral race for the living room, I will be running against my very reflection. Point number one: WEAK IN THE FACE OF ADVERSITY. This candidate has not responded well in adapting to the challenges posed by COVID-19, and in particular, distance learning. “Takes a break” more often than actually completing work. Annoyingly self-promoting about her Tik Tok account. Poor diet (apple for breakfast, half an edible for lunch, White Claw for dinner). WILL NOT STOP CRYING. I use my reflection, my political counterpart, as a “what not to do” model and an opportunity to challenge myself beyond her realm. She did put on a pair of jeans and a real shirt today for the first time in five days (pictured) so I do have to give her that, but beyond that, we are not seeing eye-to-eye here.

MAISIE: My dog.

For starter's, part of Maisie's charm is that she is an objectively terrible dog. She knows no God and no master. She is shockingly disobedient to where it's almost impressive. I'm actually surprised to see her on the ballot given that her eligibility is questionable- she has served time*. While her fearless, rebellious vigor is indeed charming for a house pet, they are unsuitable for politics. Secondly, she is under one year old which poses challenges as well. Lastly, because of her young age, we have not been able to get Maisie spayed, so in addition to being terrible she is also extremely horny. She started humping her water bowl yesterday. Her water bowl. That kind of behavior is not remotely acceptable in the #MeToo era, even amongst the canine community. Bringing her on as our leader would be a PR nightmare and impossible for us to bounce back from. Hard pass.

**We sent her to a multi-week boarding program where she was trained alongside bird dogs in order to learn discipline and it didn't work and she continues to be an adorable living nightmare.*

I think the choice here is clear, folks. Share your support on your favorite social media platform with the hashtag #VoteForJax as well as #NotReflectionJaxButRealJax #ReflectionJaxSux.

Happy quarantining!
