MY TRIP TO MAINE

So my family decided to drive from Pittsburgh to Maine to go to Acadia national park to see leaves so I'm gonna tell you about it.

Apparently my father is a sucker for leaves because a few months ago when I was deciding whether or not I should go to school or be remote he said that he was planning a trip to Maine to see the leaves. Which at the time I thought was bonkers crazy but I also thought "when else will I get to Maine?" The answer is of course probably never. So I went we started off by leaving early Friday morning I had to do class from my car on my phone which drained all the battery from my phone so I didn't have any tunes for half of the 8 to 9 hr car ride it was to Boston, my first stop. Side note sorry to my Professor I said my mic was broken but i was actually in a car. Why Boston? Because we met my sister there Friday night and had some local pizza, which Boston isn't known for but was goon nevertheless. We then crammed 5 people into a single apartment, having my sister sleep in the other room with her roommate.

We awoke the next morning and took the 4 hr trip up to Maine, my dad's driving left a lot to be desired. He's the type of driver who rarely uses turn signals and always switches lanes. Anyway we then got to the park it was amazing truly amazing we went to this beach inlet thing which was beautiful of course way too cold to swim but it was dope. I even saw a cat on a leash, I KNOW. We climbed some rocks even climbing one called Thunder rock. But then we drove up this mountain and got there just as the sunset, it was a sight the wind was so strong it could literally blow you away we walked around the peak and then drove into the nearby town that was truly the place to be, picture Granville on farmers market day but times 100. So we went to our hotel and ate Texas Roadhouse that we picked up, I had friend chicken covered in gravy pretty good. But not before stopping at this mini golf course and playing it was truly lit.

The next day we went into the town and walked around. We did the tourist thing of going up to restaurants looking at the menu and realizing it's not what you want and leaving after 20 minutes. We did though stop and have a lobster roll which was the best thing I've had ever. My dad even ate a full lobster, yes a full one. We then right before sunset went to this pond which definitely wasn't a pond it was a lake but I guess they wanted to be cute so they called it a pond. It then got dark out and we left the park but pulled over on the side of the street and looked at the stars, I saw the milky way which was hype.

But then came the worst part of the trip the drive home which was today I again had to do class on my phone in a car sorry again to my Professor. We first stopped at the New Hampshire boarder and bought some very cheap alcohol that they have. Then we dropped my sister off in Boston where we took a bit of a break and I was able to log some hours in Simpsons Hit and Run. The next stop is New York city to drop by brother off it is where we are going currently. We then have a 6hr car ride back to Pittsburgh we are estimated to get home at 4 am. I do have a lot of class tomorrow which I am not looking forward to but I would say it was totally worth it to go to Maine and these other dope locations for a weekend. And this 6 hrs home will suck but I will be able to jam out which I am doing right now listening to The Weeknd so the vibes are right. I would definitely recommend it 10/10 lobster biscuits from this man.
