THE FOOL MONTY

Coming to this school last august as a first year, we had no thought in our minds of what to expect with this semester. Little did we know the changes to the campus that we would have to deal with.

By myself and not a care in the world, I couldn't give less of a shit when it came to leaving my room. As far as I was concerned, all that mattered was food and class. Covid already made campus pretty rough, so I decided there was no reason for me to explore the school. I couldn't remember anybodys fucking name, let alone their personality. So why should I even bother with people if I can't remember a single thing about them? Don't even get me started with the professors trying to lecture their classes through three layers of masks. What is the point of in person classes when you can just wake up and go to class in your bed? Oh wait, there is none. Hey, at least we had school though and were able to do some of the things that we wanted, that's more than most other schools could say. This place is a giant bubble straight out of season 22, episode 6 of the Simpsons. Nobody comes in and nobody leaves.

If things weren't shitty enough, this new virus changed everything for the worse. Do we even remember not having to wear a dumbass piece of cloth on our faces? Not really-- for most people now this is the new world. A world where we are constantly running from an invisible foe that can bring humanity to a crawl. If this wasn't enough, on the hill there is a constant worry, not only about covid, but the punishments surrounding it. People think they are doing the right thing for the school by bluewhistling, but sometimes they are making people hate themselves while sitting at home all because they came back from the shower without a mask on one time. The amount of freshmen that got sent home last semester was comparable to the amount of notebowl discussion boards I had to do this week. First semester freshman year is important for having a good experience on this campus. Although covid is an important matter, and some students deserved to get sent home, the punishments outweighed the crime on many occasions. No matter what corner of the world we were on, covid changed our lives. We cannot control the airheads that surround us, we can only control the relationships we make and the lives we live.
