LOVE/HATE RELATIONSHIP WITH THIS CORNER

Hey cuties! The Bullsheet editors and I were grabbing a quick bite at the Nest the other week (the staff actually hanging out..... who would have thought...). While there, I couldn't help but stare at the corner of the Nest. You know the one. The corner with wood paneled walls, a church pew, a chandelier and the light up Denison sign that screams 2016 pinterest. For four years now this corner has given me so much confusion. What is its purpose? Is it for photos? Why is there a long church pew? Why is the chandelier so off center from the rest of the scene. Why is this corner rustic barn farmhouse themed... like I feel like Chip and Joanna Gaines designed this wall. How long has this part of the nest been like this? Who made this decision? Was the purpose for a photo wall for greek life formals and the Gala? I sure hope not. Why is there no other furniture in its vicinity? Has anyone ever played that piano peaking out from behind that wall?

So it is clear that I have many questions about this area. That being said, it doesn't mean that I totally dislike this area. It is cute and niche and obscure, just like Denison and its student body. I just find it so random. The best word to describe this area of Slayter's third floor is obscure. It is the most funky and purposeless area of this campus, therefore I love it. I would love to hear other people's thoughts on this space: either kik us or connect with us on linkedin to do so.

Enjoy this photo I took of the corner (if you did not know what I was referring to)

LIFE UPDATES FROM KATIE

Absolutely no one asked for this but here are some life updates from the stunning Katie Kerrigan. Basically I don't have any other ideas and I need to share some thoughts and recent happenings with someone because my mom said to stop calling several times a day

-For "spring break" my friends and I turned our apartment into a Hawaiian resort complete with piña colada, beach balls, and a beautiful ocean view (on the TV). It truly was the senior spring break I always hoped I would have. Although it was basically an all-inclusive resort for my friends because I keep forgetting to venmo request them for the food and drink.

-I find Nerds Ropes to be severely underrated. Those things SLAP. The only con to them is that the nerds often fall off when you eat it so there is a mess that accompanies the experience.

-St. Patty's Day was fun but school the next day was no pot of gold. Many folks were dressed all in green, it shamrocked.

-I enabled spell check for the Bullsheet editing software because I was tired of reading my printed articles the next day and seeing that I botched the spelling.

-School make brain big hurt. owwww

-Everytime I enter the Bullsheet office, there is a new object on the desk or on the walls and I just don't understand where they come from

-My friend and I lost IM Badminton for the fourth year in a row. Never once even made it to the ship... but we did swipe that final four spot sophomore year... we are coming for you Oral Roberts

-Speaking of Oral Roberts, FK YOU ORU! Literally destroying my bracket. They aren't the only culprit. I have a bone to pick with Purdue, Tennessee, OSU, but especially U of I. Every year I make brackets and every year they are trashed after round 1.

-The mystery airheads are the best ones. Prove me wrong.

-The job hunt is a painful, lengthy, soul-crushing process and I am hurting.

-Actually I retract my previous statement. I just found a book on the shelf in the office entitled Discover The Best Jobs For You! Tools & Strategies for Career Success. This book is from 1993 so I think it will be perfect for my 2021 employment-hunt usage. Thanks 1993 Bullsheeters!

Not me putting "Head Writer for university's largest daily publication and community dialogue" on my resume so employers think I am creative, a leader, and have great written communication skills. LOL. I hope they don't look up what the Bullsheet is.
