REVAMPING THE MOONIES

Innovative. Visionary. Reliable. These are three words that I would use to describe the ideal consultant that I would hire if I were tasked with adding the finishing touches to Moon Hall to make it a vibrant social space on this campus. I wouldn't describe myself as any of these. However, as a man who has been fully chewed, swallowed, digested, regurgitated, and re-swallowed by the Greek system, I'd like to think that I have a couple of insights to creating social spaces that compliment the nature of this campus. I would like to kindly request that if you work in any office in Denison that deals with risk management, event approval, or any sort of policy enforcement that you stop reading this article and continue to approve my events.

MICK SMITH'S GUIDE TO SURVIVE A PARTY

Have you ever been to a party and have no idea what to do? I experienced this as of recently. I went to a party with a female sports team over fall break and had no idea what to do. So here is my tried and trusted guide for surviving a party that you do not belong at.

THE PHONE WATCHER

This seems like an obvious choice but there is a technique and style to this play. You can not merely stand on the side and look at your phone awkwardly, because let's be honest, that is worse than just standing there. It draws more attention to how pathetic you are. You need to act as if you are constantly waiting for a call that will change the course of your entire business career or the hottest booty call you can think of. People will think you are "the shit" and this party is just a pit stop in your badass adventure you call life.

THE PERSON WHO DOESN'T SHUT UP

Swallow your embarrassment and pride and literally talk to everyone that will listen. If you talk to everyone you definitely will come across as a cool person or maybe a total tool, but you will keep yourself busy and that's all that matters. So just jump in head first to this issue and talk to literally everyone at the party, and who knows some might find you dumbass interesting.

JUST KEEP DRINKING

This is pretty self explanatory.

CREATE A FAKE PERSONA

Just be a person that is not actually yourself. Create a backstory for yourself and make this a social experiment. You can be pretty much anyone you want, within reason, and make conversation. Convince people you are a time traveler from 100 years in the future and you want to speak to people who don't have cyber implants. Everyone will either think you are crazy or tripping mad dick, but hey, it will be a night to remember.

PERFECT "THE FALL"

Do you crave an unreasonable amount of attention and don't know how to gain it? This play is the perfect time to gain this attention and supply you with enough to get you through the party. Just stand in a place, I advise mid conversation, and drop to the floor with no warning. People will rush to your aid and you will be the main topic for the rest of the party.
