WHO STOLE THE TREE FROM KNAPP?

If you all have yet to hear, a mischievous delinquent stole the beloved Christmas tree from Knapp Hall. As an avid Clue player and a lover of puzzles, I have a couple of ideas to figure out who stole it.

- 1. The first idea is that it was all planned. If the tree was stolen from the psychology department, it could be a case study surrounding the reactions of faculty due to an emotional attachment to an inanimate object. Or, it could be representative of how the concept of “Christmas spirit” is all a capitalistic scheme to make us less morally corrupt because someone, somewhere, decided to throw some LEDs on a pine tree. Just spitballin’ here.
- 2. Can’t campo check swipe access to buildings? If we have a time frame, we have our culprit. This also unsettles me a little bit, even though I’m innocent.
- 3. Check for fingerprints. Unless this individual is a well-versed thief (see: Exit Signs, Street Signs, Shorney “S”) they likely were not wearing gloves. I don’t think we have the constitutional right to fingerprint everybody in the school, but if we give everybody who does offer that information 20 bucks in declining, it would be a huge success.
- 4. Go based on vibes. I don’t know about you all, but I think if Kanye West or Chris Brown were ANYWHERE on your Spotify Wrapped this year, you are immediately a suspect.
- 5. Ask nicely. Ask your friends, “Hey, did you steal that Christmas Tree from Knapp?” If they really care about you, they’ll tell you the truth.
- 6. Their major is a huge indicator. If this person is a STEM major (psychology doesn’t count), there is no way they have the time- nay, they couldn’t care less about a silly tree in Knapp. They also probably didn’t even know it existed. If they’re an art major, there would be paint splotches, charcoal, and tears all over the scene of the crime (which, as far as I know, there weren’t). English majors haven’t seen the light of day in weeks, let alone the lights on a Christmas tree. Narrow it down.

Whoever stole that tree, please give it back. It’s not nice to steal things. Give me a couple more weeks and I’ll figure out who you are. Maybe.
