I NEED SOMETHING FROM DENISON

Lena Hanrahan,
6ft tall

I cannot keep peeing like this. We need to be doing better.

I am almost six feet tall. I recognize that this is not average, it’s far from normal, but the bathroom situation at Denison University is abysmal. So allow me to speak for the trees, and propose the following.

I propose that we extend the top of bathroom stalls by four additional inches because I cannot keep making eye contact with people over these damn stall doors. I literally cannot handle this level of personal human interaction in a public restroom. I don’t think this is a problem that occurs to most people, considering I’m an outlier in height, but I simply cannot stare someone in the eye while I zip up my jeans anymore. These people are looking at me like they’re expecting me to invite them in. I won’t. I refuse.

While we’re on the topic of bathroom reform, the height of the Eisner Center toilets is astounding. I freefall for like twenty three seconds before I’m sitting down in that stall. I practically need a pulley to get back up. I’m twenty one years old, my joints are arthritic, my arteries are full of microplastics. I don’t know who those toilets are set for, and how their joints are so limber, but it’s getting ridiculous.

We need change.

Sincerely,
The L(ena)orax

AN EMBARRASSING REALIZATION

Griffin Conley,
Recent Arianator

This is an embarrassing one. Last semester I started to hear more and more songs by The Beatles and think, “hey they’re pretty good”. Over winter break, I would put on the Spotify playlist This is The Beatles. Around this time I heard a song I had not heard before. Those Englishman’s silly lyrics stuck in my head. I hummed it on my way to class, when I showered, as I lined up in Slayter. When the song would actually play, I’d sing along. “Imagine”. Trying to find this song without the help of the algorithm was difficult. Whenever I would search The Beatles imagine it would return Hey Jude (Incredible song). Until Wednesday. I put on The Beatles on shuffle and what do I hear? “Imagine”. I stopped in my tracks and opened Spotify as quickly as possible to learn that the song was Imagine by Ariana Grande. Now, you’re probably wondering, why couldn’t Griffin find it before? It’s because the actual song is by Ariana Grande and not 4 Englishmen from Liverpool.
