VALENTINE'S DAY CARDS

Carter Seipel,
Hopeless And A Little Romantic

Remember Valentine's day in elementary school? With the cheesy little cards and the cardboard mailboxes. Let's do that again! To get started here's some cards! Cut them out (after reading the back) and gift them to friends, lovers, professors and even strangers!!

Erm actually...

Valentine's Day is a scam by big chocolate to sell more candies to couples brainwashed by capitalism into having no way of expressing their love for one another without spending money, but if I did believe in Valentine's Day, which I don't for the reasons above, but say hypothetically I did... I'd want you to be my valentine. Please?

Dear Valentine,
where my hug at?

Yours truly,

MARITAL WOES? CALL IN!

Carter Seipel,

(A Giver of Advice)

With the recent spotlight on my marriage, we here at Bullsheet have seen an influx of questions from students and staff alike. I thought I'd be kind enough to answer a few questions so you can save your marriage this Valentine's Day!

I'm thinking of proposing to my girlfriend of 12 years. How should I pop the question?

Don't :)

I don't know how to express my love towards my partner, and I'm afraid they're pulling away as a result! How do you show someone you truly love them?

Pet names! Endearing little nicknames, easy to add to your day to day but go a long way in conveying your attachment. I should add, pet names are especially helpful if you forgot your partner's name. For example, I call my wife "Spot!"

I'm always late for dinner and I think it's starting to annoy my wife, thoughts?

They say you should never stop dating your partner. Would you show up late to a date? I would. Dating is a mental game, you have to get into your opponent's head. For instance this valentines day I booked a reservation at a fancy hotel restaurant and told my wife to meet me there. Will I get there early? No. Will I get there on time? Absolutely not! Cool people show up to the party late and leave early. Shouldn't my wife think I'm cool? In fact that's your problem, your wife doesn't think you're cool. You have to up your game! How? One word; Rolex. Which honestly might help your punctuality problem!

My husband's best friend was in charge of recording our wedding, however he only filmed extreme close ups of me. I mean my husband isn't in a single shot! Help?

How romantic! I'd run away with that fellow if I were you.

My boyfriend refuses to read the bullsheet!!!

Although it may be hard, sometimes we have to accept that those we love may have different interests than us. Pushing our loved ones to see the world exactly like we do does nothing productive except push them away. Instead try celebrating the fact you have a hobby outside of your relationship. JK! No Bullsheet? Dump em'

After thirty years, my marriage has grown painfully stale. My husband and I will go days without speaking to one another. My only source of joy is the fantasy that some day I'll work up the courage to burn this god forsaken house down and my husband along with it, finally giving me the chance to start anew. To prevent this grim fantasy from becoming a reality my husband has suggested adding a third! Our only problem is none of our friends accepted the throuple invitation. Any takers from the bullsheet staff?

Not it!
