JAKE PAUL VS MIKE TYSON

Tatum Thomas,
Junior Writer

On March 7th, 2024 it was announced that Mr. It'sEverydayBro himself, Jake Paul, would be fighting one of the best boxers of all time Mike Tyson in a boxing match airing on Netflix for all the world to see. Yup, that's right, the guy with the "Disney channel flow" is fighting the guy who famously bit another man's ear off! As a casual viewer of YouTube boxing, I haven't seen a match-up so mind-boggling since Deji and Logan announced their separate fights against Floyd Mayweather.

If you didn't know, Jake is infamous for knocking guys out and putting them to sleep. He's 9-1 in the ring, but most of his victories are over retired MMA & UFC fighters (and even a retired NBA player twice). Basically, bro fights people who aren't boxers. People have been wanting him to face a real boxer for years and that day is finally here! The only caveat is that the person he's fighting is a 57-year-old past his prime Mike Tyson - who is pushing the legal line of being considered a senior citizen. With that being said Mike can definitely still go but the last time we saw him fight it was 4 years ago against somebody his age and not in their 20s.

"So how will this fight play out?" I hear you ask. In my head this would be the perfect scenario:

As much as people want that to come true the chances of that happening are low. Let me save you from watching the PPV in a few weeks and tell you what's gonna do down now.

They both said that they'll treat it like a real fight but what's most likely going to happen is an exhibition match where barely any punches will be thrown and it will just be Mike bouncing around and throwing jabs messing with Jake since he's the more experienced fighter of the two. If punches are thrown it won't be anything too serious and If Jake actually finds a way to knock out Mike Tyson I will stand outside of Slayter with one of those styrofoam Hulk fist toys and you can punch me in the stomach for doubting the new GOAT of boxing, Jake Joeseph Paul (yes, that's his middle name lol).

2024-2025 ALTERNATIVE HOUSING

Eleanor Mason,
First-Year Writer

Housing selection got you down? Have no fear. Administration might not tell you this, but there are dozens of beautiful, comfortable, and, best of all, COMPLETELY FREE housing options on campus if you know where to look. Here are some options to consider if your situation is looking grim.

Academic Buildings - This might not be everyone's first choice. These buildings are public spaces of course, and some people might not enjoy being awoken by an 8:30 lecture each morning. However, the sheer diversity of room types should make up for this issue. Whether you're a social butterfly looking to nap in Knapp or a shut-in dreaming of curling up in the blissful, window-less darkness of an Eisner instrument cubby, academic buildings are a great option for those who seek non-conventional housing

The Bioreserve - Looking for something more scenic? Why not sleep in the Bioreserve! If you thought The Homestead was eco-friendly, just wait 'til you try this. With fully natural lighting, spontaneous electricity-free showers, and stunning open-air bathrooms, this is by far the most environmentally-sustainable housing on campus. Not only will you reduce your carbon footprint, but you'll wake each morning to the sound of birds and the gentle pitter-patter of bug feet on your face. Sure, it's a bit of a hike to breakfast each morning, and winter will be tough, but, for campus nature-lovers, nothing beats this option's natural beauty

Non-Standard Dorm Options - At this point, some of you might be wondering if there are any options for the less adventurous among us. And the answer is, of course there are! For those who would prefer a traditional dorm but fear the brutality of the traditional housing process, consider the Monster Method. By inhabiting the gaps underneath beds, closets, and dark stairwells, you can simultaneously reduce scary monster infestations and dodge the equally scary housing process. If this doesn't speak to you, consider the Cuddle Buddy Method. All you need is a friend with a bed, and you're set! After all, nothing improves a tiny college mattress like one or more other people to share it with. Whatever you choose, there are countless creative ways to put a fun twist on your residential life for the 2024-2025 academic year.

Oh what? You want there to be a little funny picture here for you to look at? Don't we give you enough to look at everyday? We put a sheet out every day to entertain the public. I'm not your little clown that will put funny pictures here all the time. Maybe sometimes I just want to vibe and chill. Ever thought about that?
