HOW TO DEAL WITH REJECTION

Caroline Lopez,
Junior Editor

'Tis the season! Crushes. Schools. Internships.

I will preface by saying that this is not a pity train, and at this point I'd be delighted to work any sort of job this summer. However, probably like many others reading this, I've now received rejection, after rejection, after rejection for the internships I've applied for over the summer! It's just my expectation at this point, so I think I've become numb to the process of receiving a Gmail notification on my watch, knowing that it is likely a rejection, and never even checking the full email on my computer because I can already feel the bad news sitting in my inbox. In the meantime, I've had to come up with some creative ways to make myself feel better. They are as follows:

- Go cry about it!
- Go laugh about it!
- Draft a really well-worded email to the selection committee that's only slightly passive aggressive but mostly just makes them feel bad about rejecting such a nice, pretty, deserving candidate. Delete the draft. Wish you hadn't deleted it and just kept it in your Notes app for any time you need to send an angry email that isn't fueled by your fury in the heat of the moment.
- Look up all the past participants and make up lives for them that are so unachievable that it only makes sense that you got rejected.
- Talk to your friends about how you didn't even want it in the first place.
- Start working on your assignments that are due in two weeks because you must be a horrible student and you should probably be more engaged in your schoolwork.
- Organize your desktop because it feels like you are doing something important.
- Finally learn the lyrics of a rap song that you want to be able to fully sing along to.

And that's it! At this point those are probably your best options. Academia is far below you and you deserve to live a life of whimsy. But also I hope I still get an internship. Fingers crossed!

POLL: HOW OFTEN DO YOU CLEAN YOUR WATER BOTTLE?

Caroline Lopez,
Junior Editor

Please mark the appropriate square and return to the Bullsheet office. We've been trying to figure out what to do with the greywater for months now.

ONCE A DAY	ONCE A WEEK	ONCE EVERY TWO WEEKS
ONCE A MONTH	ONCE EVERY COUPLE OF MONTHS	ONLY WHEN THAT GREEN STUFF STARTS GROWING AROUND THE RIM
