I am bored. I have hit a slump. I am losing the internal debate to skip class more and more as the weeks go. In my opinion, it is because of one culprit. My commutes are too boring!! Chapel walk day in and day out is not mentally stimulating. Sure the white dog does a decent enough job and yes the Hoag or Gilpatrick frequently has coffee or donuts out, but what about once I cross the bridge? Where is my stimulus there?

And so, I propose the idea of simple elevator music. Let's start streaming the Doobie in academic buildings. Why stop at the Pit? Imagine hearing the eclectic music taste that is WDUB streaming into the mirrored-ceiling box that occupies Higley. Yes, it does mean that WDUB Disc Jockeys would be under the watchful ear of elevator riding professors.

Further, how about some live music? Who could say no to pregaming for a journalism class with the Overalls doing a live set in the Barney Davis elevator?

Or potentially leaving class and hearing Where Did All the Time Go by Dr. Dog as you make your way out of Knapp?

"ORANGE DRINK," PLEASE?

Caroline Lopez,
Junior Editor

So apparently, J-LO has recently gone viral for her atrocity of a bodega order -- a ham and cheese on a roll with an orange drink, "if you know, you know." The consensus has been that most native New Yorkers do not "know." Most of the debate lies within the small detail of an "orange drink," the confusion encompassing the endless possibilities for what that orange drink could possibly be.

I've always thought of J-LO as an orange powerade girl, but maybe she means something more like Emergen-C. Honestly, the possibilities are endless. What we do know is that she drinks exactly seven cups of water per day, according to goodhousekeeping.com. And what I challenged myself to do was compile a short list of bodega orders that would be 1. better than J-LO's and 2. far more specific. It wasn't very hard.

1. Bacon, egg, and cheese with a Tropicana orange juice
2. Poop sandwich with an extra scoop of poop
3. Pepperoni and unwashed lettuce on ciabatta, with a side of Ms. Vickies Spicy Dill Pickle chips
4. Cigarettes
5. A bottle of Aquafina water
