WHERE SHOULD I OFF-CAMPUS STUDY? Lindsey George, Wondering

As a first semester sophomore, the process to prepare for off-campus study has officially begun. However, I am at an absolute loss as to where I should study. I am looking forward to exploring a new place, understanding new culture, trying new foods, seeing new sights, and learning new things. I am torn between a variety of programs that are available for next fall. Please, dear readers, help me decide.

Orlando, Florida - A unique semester, to say the least. This location has many activities for me to explore in my free time, and countless chances to get to know different walks of life. Besides, the weather would be a plus.

Antarctica - Denison is yet to send a student to Antarctica for off-campus study. Should I be the first? While I could gain valuable experience, like hugging penguins and making snow angels, I'm worried that it may be a tad bit chilly.

Columbus, Ohio - Venturing far away to Columbus would mean being thrown into the life of an urban metropolis. I would finally get my Gossip Girl moment, under the bright lights of the big city. There is plenty to explore in this city in central Ohio, and I know I would learn so much.

Area 51 - This location has incredible research opportunities that are truly one-of-a-kind, and cannot be found anywhere else in the world... or can they? I'll report back after my semester there. This experience would truly be out of this world.

Atlantis - While the journey to get there may be a slight pain, I do believe this opportunity would provide a unique experience that I could receive at no other location. This program would provide great benefits for my major in environmental studies, as well. Plus, I do love the ocean.

Shiz University - Doing a semester at another university would mean integrating myself into a new system of learning, and getting to know fascinating students who live and study there. This would be a magical semester.

Knapp 108 - I could, in fact, stay right where I am, spending the semester in the Bullsheet office. That's where our office is, by the way, in Knapp 108. It's also where you can spend much of your time, if you apply to the Bullsheet...

APPLY.

No seriously. Apply.

Was that entire article just a sneaky way to advertise the Bullsheet applications...?
