"Monday Music"

Poem by Meredith Havre

Huffman dining Hall
In the midst of fall
8:30 Monday morning
Going to class, so boring
Music fills the air
Its got no flair
Moon beam ice cream
All these songs are so mainstream

(Wait, am I kinda good at this???)

I'm not one much for competition
But let's make this a petition
Come one come all
Leave your signature at Knapp Hall
It's to tell me I'm good
That I'm better than Elliot ever could.

4 SIGNS YOUR ROOMMATE IS THE EBAUGH POND SWAMP MONSTER

Carter Seipel,
Senior Monster Spotter

Every Halloween I educate the campus on how to spot the monsters that lurk amongst us. This series began my freshman year with “4 signs your roommate is a vampire.” Now, it’s my senior year, and it’s time for one last job. When deciding what monster to expose, none seemed more pressing than the swamp people native to Denison’s very own Ebaugh Pond. So, grab your snorkel and strap in! Here are four signs your roommate is a Swamp Monster:

1. They’re always taking long showers

Do you often find yourself clutching your bladder, waiting for your turn in the bathroom? You may think that your roommate is just cleaning themselves very thoroughly but I’m here to tell you something more sinister could be going on behind that closed bathroom door. After a long day of being exposed to our polluted air, scorching sun, and bright overhead LED lights, the amphibious swamp monster needs to spend at least an hour submerged in agua. What better spot to soak in the water than a long, steamy shower? It’s like showers were made for these swamp people!

2. They’re vegetarian

Look, I’m not here to say all vegetarians are evil. That would be crazy! What I am here to say is that a swamp monster’s diet only consists of plants and the occasional fish. Remind you of a certain group? Being a vegetarian is the perfect cover for a swamp monster, meaning it’s important to doubt any self-proclaimed vegetarian roommates. Please be extra wary if your roommate enjoys kale, spinach, or any other leafy greens that may be reminding them of their mossy homes.

3. You catch them crying

Ever see your roommate with tears streaming down their face? That’s odd! We’re all busy college students going through the wonderful age of 2025. What is there possibly to cry about? There could only be one reason someone’s face would be wet with tears. They must have just come from the bottom of a pool, pond, or perhaps even a swamp? Suspicious...

4. Their skin is green

I don’t need to make any rash judgments, but if your skin is green, that’s more than a rash. That’s swamp skin!

DO YOU MISS OLD AI SLOP?

Aiyana Harrison,
AI is in her name!

Over the years A.I. has made significant progress. Even I, an alleged A.I. expert, struggle to recognize it during my nightly TikTok doom scroll. In light of this devastating growth, a cry for the return to old A.I. slop has been gaining more footing. More and more artists have been posting art drawn as if it was generated by those first A.I. image generators years ago. All this has got me asking myself. Is this the end of the cycle? The snake has eaten its tail and there is nothing left. The people and the machines have swapped places. I might as well just give in and ride the trend wave. So here, you’ve won internet, my addition to the slop pile.
