HIDDEN MICROPHONES ON CAMPUS PT. 2

*Anonymous
Submission*

I know now what they're using the hidden microphones for. It was a mistake to send you my previous letter, but it's too late to turn back now. As horrifying as it is, no matter how much I want to go back and just tell myself to ignore all of it and look away and pretend to be good like everyone else is, I can't now. I've set this all up for myself, and as the consequences close in on me, I understand that whatever injustices are against me or however right I am, none of that matters. I still lose. I wish so much that things could be different, or that I could escape, but they won't let me. I can't drag my family into this. Why they haven't taken me yet, I don't know, but they're going to be back. I have to give a statement while I can.

This morning, I saw the man from the administration who had the blue buzzy head on his desk. In fact, I saw that buzzy head, that costume piece drenched in blue ink like a Jackson Pollock painting, right as I woke up. It was sitting on my desk, and blue ink was dripping down off of it onto the floor, right on the rug my father gave me. I screamed when I saw it (apologies to my neighbors; it was early, I'm sorry) and after a minute grabbed the card I had noticed attached to it.

"Welcome to the World" was on its cover above a drawing of a sleeping baby floating amidst yellow star shapes with tails like comets. I opened the card and read what was inside with difficulty due to my hands shaking. In green pen on the inside, it reads as follows.

"The beginning of a new life is something to celebrate, isn't it? New hands to reach out at the sky. Your article was cute. Come for dinner at Barney-Davis at 7."

When I had collected myself and left my dorm, the man from the administration was in my common room. He gave me the same creepy smile and said, "You'll be late for class if you keep staring at me like a lunatic. Go."

I went to that dinner; how could I not? I had nowhere to run, no car, and nobody would help me. They were inside my room. At Barney, the man was there, and he walked me to the basement and unlocked a door before taking me inside through a long tunnel. We got to a table with chairs, and he sat me down before a third person walked up carrying a large platter of food. It was dark in the tunnel, but it was me. There's no doubt at all in my head it was me. Me with paler skin and shorter hair and wearing blue silk pajamas. I was paralyzed with fear as it lifted the platter to reveal a cake with the icing reading, "happy birthday." It cut me and the man a slice. When it notices I'm not eating, it grabs me by the chin and looks me deep in the eyes before saying in a voice perfectly mimicking my own, "It's sugar-free," which marks the point before my memory becomes blurry. It walks away from us; the man finishes his cake while I'm trembling and unable to move. The man then gets up as well and says, "Go back out the way you came in. It will lock behind you when you leave. If you write another little piece about me, make sure to mention the cake. It was my grandma's recipe. You'll be seeing us again."

I'm so sorry for everything.
