GRANVILLE'S "Most Bittersweet" PUBLICATION

Vol. XLV, No. 108

A FOND FAREWELL

William Eddleman,
Nostalgic

Well, nothing lasts forever, does it?

This is the last bullsheet that will ever be written in the current Bullsheet office. As some of you may have heard, the Denisonian, Doobie, and Bullsheet are all moving up in the world (campus). We're joining forces in the MEDIA HOUSE. It's exactly what it sounds like. A full-on, complete, two story house where we will have our offices and event space. But with that positive change, we say goodbye today to a dear friend.

The Bullsheet office, located in a rancid corner of the student publication offices on Knapp 1st floor, has served us faithfully for countless semesters. While the bullsheet is more than an office (it's a lifestyle), it does feel like a loss. I feel kind of a twinge in my heart to say goodbye to this space, even though I voted in favor of the move. After all, this is where I had my interview, where I learned to edit the sheet, where I've spent many late nights this semester writing... Things won't be the same without this shabby little office.

In honor of the Knapp Bullsheet office, I'd like to present a poem that I wrote for it:

Ahem

Bullsheet office, there in Knapp
Faithfully you've stood
For every class of funny writers
You've done the best you could

With your broken printers, dirty jouch,
And ants upon your desk
You always seemed to welcome me
But now it's time to rest

Weinberg cutouts, crappy chairs,
Comfy bench out in the hall
Glowing string lights, moldy fridge,
And random bullshit on the walls

Yes, retirement is here for you,
It's nothing you did wrong
You always were an office proud
To house us for so l-

Wait. Hold on. Just got word that the moving process has been postponed yet again. We're moving in after the next break (and always will be).

Well, this is awkward. Guess you're stuck with us a little longer, Knapp office.

Now I have to think of another poem...

NEW SUPERPEOPLE

William Eddleman,
Superpowered

We've all been oversaturated with Marvel and DC at this point, right? Too many characters, too many timelines, too much confusion. I just got into the X-Men movies, and trying to make sense of the continuity just feels like another class!

Luckily, I am starting a new superhero universe to freshen things up. Here are just a few of the new superheroes and supervillains that are going to steal the hearts of superfans worldwide:

Buzzard Man:

Has a number of classic superpowers, like flight and super strength, but also buzzard-specific ones, like super-squaking. He hates when people confuse him for Spiderman villain "The Vulture." They're different guys! I promise they're different!

Painbow:

Some say Marvel and DC got too woke. I say they never got woke enough. Painbow is here to correct these faults. Painbow has the powers of super strength, creating rainbows anywhere, and also has a superhumanly accurate gaydar. They are often seen at Pride, or beating up homophobes. Painbow wasn't always called Painbow. In the original concept, Painbow was going to be a gay version of Magneto with a very similar name. That idea was scrapped, which is probably for the best.

The Confessioner:

A devoutly Catholic supervillain. Has the power to telepathically inflict crushing Catholic guilt on his enemies. The Confessioner is usually the nemesis of Painbow, but there is always a weird tension between the two of them...

Antifa Super-Soldier:

She's real. The Antifa Super-Soldier (A.S.S.) that your Fox News watching uncle warned you about is real. Antifa Super Soldier is a mysterious antihero with a "jack of all trades" power set. She has a mild form of pyrokinesis, able to create molotov cocktails out of thin air. Her heightened resilience makes her immune to tear gas, rubber bullets, and flashbangs. She also has the power of invisibility, but only to security cameras. When she's not rioting, moshing, or sabotaging, A.S.S. can be found distributing extremely long-winded anarchist zines.

Get ready for the new wave of super people! 35 movies are already in the works.

SPRING BREEAAAK!

William Eddleman,
Spring Broken

There is no joke. Happy Spring Break! You made it!

I'll be in California on the EESC field trip. If you have cool or funny spring break stories, submit 'em to the Bullsheet when you get back!

Go get some well-earned rest. Thanks for reading the only student newspaper at Denison University!
