

THE BOWL-SHEET, DUHH

Lindsey,
Hungry

If you expected anything other than a bowl review from this sheet, I'm not sure what to tell you...buckle up.

I'm not a fan of this bowl. Its shape resembles more of a dog bowl than something used by people, but I can imagine it would be easy to clean. However, I believe it would give me more of an industrial feel than I might enjoy. #cleangirlaesthetic. 2/10

This oversized mug makes a cozy vessel for soup or pasta. I can imagine myself sitting by a cozy fire eating Annie's cheddar cheese pasta with the rain pouring outside. My only complaint is the handle, and the awkward way of holding a bowl like this. The color, though, redeems this one. 8/10.

This large glass bowl seems sturdy and like it would be dishwasher safe. I appreciate these features very much. In a pinch, it could be efficient as a bowl for my dinner, but I think I would rather use it for cookie dough or cake batter. I don't dislike it, though. 6/10.

This is a fantastic bowl. The colors make it whimsical and cheery, and it seems to be a fantastic size for a large serving of cereal, Sweetgreen salad, popcorn, or vanilla ice cream with rainbow sprinkles. It adds an element of FUN to everyday life. While it may be a bit big for every day, and the orange isn't my favorite, it brings me much joy. 9/10.

Fun fact, readers, I own this bowl. I own four of these bowls, and they are sitting in my dorm room right now. I could not recommend these plastic Target bowls more. They hold the perfect amount of food, and are so easy to clean you wonder what magic they contain. I love these bowls. So much. 10/10.

Now this is a lovely bowl. The shape is perfect for a variety of uses, and the designs highlight its already present beauty. I like this bowl very much, I only fear that my clumsy self may drop it, causing it to shatter everywhere, but perhaps that is a personal problem. Overall, I think I would be very happy eating out of this bowl. 8/10.

While I like the wooden aspect of this bowl, as it gives the product a homey and comfortable feel, it does not seem like it should be used on an everyday basis. It seems like it may be better suited as a centerpiece, or as a vessel for a presentation of a meal. I do appreciate the details of the wood, and the polished surface, though I feel it would be an overwhelming bowl to eat from normally. 5/10.

This bowl was probably bought 20 years ago and comes in handy often enough to not be thrown away. The popcorn bowl, perhaps, or when someone didn't do the dishes and this is the only clean bowl left. It would do the trick, though. It seems easy to clean, and good for many different uses. Hey, I'll take it. 7/10.

Staff "Bowl Foods" Box

- Carter "Wheaties" Seipel, Managing Editor
- Christine "Canned Soup" Trueh, Head Writer
- Leah "Spaghetti O's" Jackson, Senior Editor
- Lindsey "Annie's Mac" George, Sophomore Editor
- William "Ice Cream" Eddleman, Sophomore Editor
- Lucy "Caesar Salad" Dale, Foreign Correspondant
- Elliot "Cheerio's" Harpham, Senior Writer
- Eleanor "Mashed Potatoes" Mason, Foreign Correspondant
- Lucy "Grain Bowl" Hollingsworth-Hays, Sophomore Writer
- Anna "Chili" Crum, Sophomore Writer
- Lilly "Ramen" Andrews, Freshman Writer
- Lily "Smoothie Bowl" Reaser, Freshman Writer
- Aiyana "Taco Bowl" Harrison, Freshman Writer
- Meredith "Candy Salad" Havre, Freshman Writer

