

Edited last night by:

Carter Seipel

Delivered this morning by:

Lilly Andrews

March 9th, 2026

GRANVILLE'S "MOST GAMES" PUBLICATION

Vol. XLV, No. 104

4 GAMES TO PLAY WHILE TRAVELING FOR SPRING BREAK

*Carter Seipel,
Pro-Gamer*

Tired of playing the quiet game with your friends as you travel together to your spring break destination? Well, as a reputable news source, it is our job to provide games! Here are four fun games you can play with friends while traveling:

- 1. Who Has the Biggest Weakness? - If it can be asked in an interview, it can be asked in the company of friends. Start discussing the weaknesses of everyone around you, but don't get caught with the worst one! If people are on to your lack of punctuality, throw someone else under the bus for being a chronic kleptomaniac. The game ends when the biggest weakness is agreed upon or someone cries.
- 2. Who Can Steal the Most Valuable Part of This Car? - When you're in your friend's car for hours, it can get kind of boring. See if you can steal a screw. You did it? Sick! Now the person sitting to your right (driver excluded) must steal something more valuable than a screw. Around and around the game goes until the driver notices or the car stops working. Please note, experienced players may choose to play on planes, trains, and boats instead.
- 3. License Plate Bingo - Remember "Who can steal the most valuable part of this car?" Well, this game is similar to that except it won't cost your friend thousands of dollars at a mechanic. The goal of this game is to steal five license plates off of other cars. When someone collects five in a row, they get the honor of tossing all of the metal plates into the sky while shouting, "Bingo!"
- 4. Carpool Karaoke Karaoke - This one is easy! All you need is a working radio and a heart. Everyone in the car takes a turn singing along to the radio while doing their best James Corden impression. And don't act like you don't have one! Whoever can hold the best Corden impersonation for an entire song gets to yell at a waiter at your next pitstop. What a lucky ducky!

And there you have it! Four games to play while traveling for spring break that are guaranteed to pass the time, boost friendships, and turn those frowns upside down. If you do not have success with our little games, please remember these have all been play-tested so you are the problem. The Bullsheet staff will not take responsibility for any issues that arise from user-error.

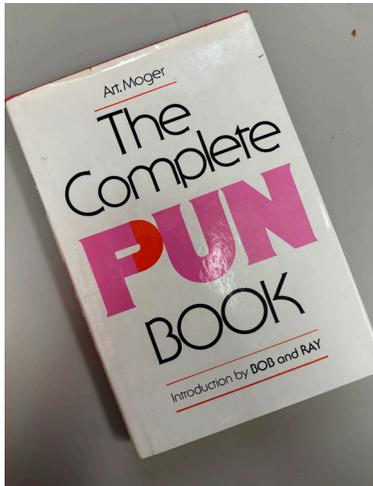

This includes issues such as: broken friendships, broken cars, broken sense of self esteem, lawsuits, cease and desists from Corden's estate, and, perhaps worst of all, awkward silences. Should you find yourself stuck in an awkward silence, we recommend reading each passing road sign and billboard to fill in the silences. You're welcome. Now go enjoy spring break!

7 PUNS OFF OF THE BULLSHEET BOOKSHELF TO PASS THE TIME

Carter Seipel,
Pro-Book Studier

On The Bullsheet's iconic bookshelf sits the ace up our sleeve, AKA, The Complete Pun Book! Think of a pun right now. Well, we've already read it. This is how we all got so funny! Don't believe me? Here's a few quotes to prove it:

"A fellow who inflates balloons: A balloonatic." (Pg 144)

"Gum was first sold on a chew-chew train." (Pg 41)

"Camouflage: Wise guise." (Pg 97)

"A lady pilot: A plane Jane." (Pg 97)

"In 1956 strip mining was banned in Boston." (Pg 58)

"A cat ate cheese and waited for the mouse with baited breath." (Pg 73)

"Modern Housewife: One who dresses to kill and cooks the same way" (Pg 139)

"Two silkworms were in a race. They ended up in a tie" (Pg 65)

"The out-of-work stripper had no acts to grind." (Pg 68)

SITTIN' AT SIPS

Carter Seipel,
Pro-Loiterer

The other day I was loitering inside of SIPS, Denison's student-run late-night drink spot. I didn't order anything, I just sort of stood around. I thought it would be good promo for The Bullsheet if I offered to sign the cup of everyone who ordered a The Bullsheet. Turns out it's a very popular drink! No shock there. But what was absolutely shocking was the fact that no one who ordered a The Bullsheet wanted my autograph! In fact, they seemed disgusted that I even breathed towards their drink, but this might be because I was still slightly sick. Really putting the cough into coffee, am I right? Anyways, people wanted to drink The Bullsheet, but didn't want to discuss the complex comedy of our satirical publication with me, the paper's managing editor. How weird is that? That's like disliking tomatoes but liking ketchup. I don't like either, but that's not really the point right now. The point is, I don't think you should be allowed to order a The Bullsheet and not enjoy The Bullsheet as a paper. That's why I plan on loitering around SIPS every night and ask anyone who orders a The Bullsheet Bullsheet-related trivia before they can get their drink. So, let this be a warning to all of our readers who also enjoy the best drink on the SIPS menu. I know it's almost spring break but you must study up before you go back to SIPS. Unless you're just there to loiter! They really love it when you do that!

Staff "SIPS Order" Box

Carter "A The Bullsheet" Seipel, Managing Editor
 Christine "A The Bullsheet" Trueh, Head Writer
 Leah "A The Bullsheet" Jackson, Senior Editor
 Lindsey "A The Bullsheet" George, Sophomore Editor
 William "A The Bullsheet" Eddleman, Sophomore Editor
 Lucy "A The Bullsheet" Dale, Foreign Correspondant
 Elliot "A The Bullsheet" Harpham, Senior Writer
 Eleanor "A The Bullsheet" Mason, Foreign Correspondant
 Lucy "A The Bullsheet" Hollingsworth-Hays, Sophomore Writer
 Anna "A The Bullsheet" Crum, Sophomore Writer
 Lilly "A The Bullsheet" Andrews, Freshman Writer
 Lily "A The Bullsheet" Reaser, Freshman Writer
 Aiyana "A The Bullsheet" Harrison, Freshman Writer
 Meredith "A The Bullsheet" Havre, Freshman Writer

Rest in Peace Alli.
CLIC just lost one of their strongest soldiers

